Although Montgomery could not have gotten a division of time from Mr. Lewis yet it is not true that Montgomery sought by every means to obtain from him a division of time. The chairman of the district committee never petitioned for a division of time. No proper mode to obtain a joint debate was resorted to by Montgomery or his friends at any time. I have never known any one to so disregard the truth, even in the simplest statement of the fact, as this wilfully malicious scribbler at Hartford. Montgomery and his friends knew well that Lewis had too high a sense of his own personal honor to recognize, in joint debate, Montgomery

A Good Kentucky Law.

Kentucky is making loug strides thead of her educational policy. She is adopting school legislation that other State would be wise to follow hour before he could leave the stand One provision of especial interest is that"there shall be a county teachers' library in each county of the Commonwealth, to be kept under the care and in the office ofthe county superintendent, for the exclusive use and benefit the teachers of the county." Collections for the purpose are taken at each annual institute. The county superintendent, as chairman, and two persons elected by the institute constitute a library committee, to select books and manage the library. Ed. Porter Thompson, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, who is a wide-awake, progressive educator, is making every effort to have this library idea bear the best possible fruit. It is an idea that deserves cultivation. With very little library can be gradually accumulated in each county. Members of Congress and Senators are glad to help such public institutions along by procuring for them the invaluable scientific and other reports issued by the Goveyment. Other donations will doubtless be forthcoming. Book are now so cheap that it is in these days a comparatively simple matter to get together a good working library, such a library in every county is what Kentucky is aiming at, and it is a high aim .- [The Pathfinder.

BATTLE WITH A BOA. Its Tightening Fold Wrapped About His Windpipe.

An Incident of the Hunt in Venezuela Prof. O'Reilly's Clever Rescue of His Native Servant from the Em-brace of a Giant Serpent.

During my snake-hunting progress eastward through the Venezuelan forest, writes G. R. O'Reilly, of the Ireland Royal Zoological society, whenever for any length of time I made my headquarters in any village or settlement, I almost invariably had one or two young fellows trained under my own eye, to capture alive without fear the largest and most deadly kinds that the primeval wilderness could produce.

Pedro Vargas, a swarthy-skinned stripling of seventeen, clad only in shirt and trousers, with a palm leaf hat upon his head, barefoot and barelegged to the knee, was the quickest and bravest of all my daring serpent chasers.

One morning at sunrise Pedro and I started off for the forest in search of huge boa constrictor reported to have been seen by some hunters on the previous evening. We had each a cutlass with which to sever the entangling vines in our route, a long stick to use in dealing with rattlesnakes or bushmasters, a wallet of provisions for the day and some surpassed. For futher particulars, stout bags to confine our expected captive in, but none of extraordinary capacity, judging the size of the reported bon to be, as usual, exagger-

Before we had proceeded far the sounds of gunshots in the distance ly free to any address in the United attracted our attention. We soon States or Canada on receipt of 14cts. came up with the shooters, and were very hunters who had yesterday encountered the boa we were in quest of.

Over the forest-clad hills for some two miles we with difficulty made our way, continually slashing a road with our cutlasses, to where there was a deep ravine.

It was among the rocks on the precipitous side of this ravine that they had seen the boa on the evening before. About half way down, or, perhaps, fifty feet from the gravelly bottom, they showed us the spot where he had lain, and the hole in the rock into which they said he had What People Said-An Idle Exile. glided at their approach.

As he was not now in his hiding place we set diligently to work to search every rock and bush in the vicinity. Pedro, meanwhile, left us. and, going down to the dried up river bed, began to seek him beneath the bushes overhanging the sandy margin. He was very soon successful.

"Santa Madre," he shouted. "Que

grande cabeza!' On hearing this we all stood still, anxiously gazing down at him, wondering what it was he had discovered. As he uttered the words we saw him in the act of ascending a huge bowlder, overshadowed by a spreading fan-palm's spacious leaves.

For a moment he was lost to view. The palm leaves swayed and rustled violently, and before we had time to move a step there was Pedro rolling off the bowlder down to the sand below, with the enormous snake coiled with its many folds around him. As he fell he yelled out wildly for assistance. I shouted to him to hold him fast and not let go on any account, and while we hurried down the rough incline he could be heard swearing lustily as he struggled to free himself from the tightening embraces of his prisoner. There he lay on his back holding the great boa, with one hand clutched about its throat. There was coil upon coil of the monster's length wound around his neck and arms and body. His legs only were free, and with these he tried vigorously to get on his feet; but in vain, for the weight around his neck and shoulders, as well as the pinioning of his arms, completely prevented any such action. He could only lie there helplessly on his back and kick. When we reached him he could speak no more and his face was fast growing livid, though otherwise he was conscious enough; but the pressure round his throat was too much for him. The swollen veins stood out upon his forehead and his eyes appeared bulging-evidently the snake was strangling him, while he still kept it clutched by the throat, for though a boa constrictor cannot crush one's ribs, he can easily squeeze a neck quite enough to choke. Now, the best way to unloose a coiled boa is to commence at the tail, so for that I jumped at once and found it stoutly enlapped around the stems of the bushes. I proceeded to untie it, but as fast as could get it off from one place it instantly twisted afresh around an-

As it was clear that this delay might have serious consequences, I .. once prepared for other tactics. I knew that if I threatened the excited reptile while Pedro remained perfectly still and quietly let go his hold on its throat, the beast would at once attack me by biting, but not by winding around me, for this last they never do, except with animals they intend to swallow or when held prisoner, as Pedro was now holding this one. Preparing myself, therefore, for the onset by taking the bags we had with us and wrapping them around my hands to protect them against its teeth, I stood off a little by the reptile's head and shouted to Pedro to let go, which he had till now been afraid to do. The other hunters, meanwhile, paralyzed by fear, stood around, not knowing at the moment what course to pursue. They never uttered a word. In pugilistic attitude, I took my position before the hissing snake, and, with both hands protected by the bags, as with boxing gloves, feigned a blow at him the moment Pedro loosened his grasp. The enraged animal, seeing me thus menacingly moving in front of him, gave vent to a most terrifying hiss, and bit toward me with widely-gaping jaws. He struck right toward my face, but much entwined around the boy to reach out far enough to catch me. His folds now began to loosen on Pedro, all his rage being directed to me. This was just what I desired, to draw him from his relaxing embrace of my assistant, and so allow the latter to come to my aid in effecting his capture. For several minutes I kept the angry snake thus biting at me, and as after each attack he would unwind another twist of his body Pedro, whom I repeatedlf warned to stay quiet, was soon vigorously with my hissing antagonist, without, of course, ever allowing him to catch me. Alternately he would dash madly at me and then gather himself anew for another spring. Slowly he was every attack his powerful tail would swish through the loose gravel, sending the dry dust in yellowish clouds about himself. Now that he was far enough away, I gave the word to Pedro to jump up and cut a good-sized pole in the thicket. With this we both managed to press down his neck, pinning him firmly to the ground, upon which he tried vainly to turn and bite the offending wood, and twisted himself around it right up to our very hands. Quickly at my call the other hunters came to our assistance and while they held on, some to the pole and some to the snake, I caught him firmly, just as Pedro had done before, around the neck with both hands. Now that I had him by the head, Pedro by the tail and some others by the middle, we soon got him loose from the pole and in triumph bore him off homewards, through the forests, for none of the bags we had with us was anything like large enough to stow him

It was suggested that, if one end of the cavity was stopped up, we could allow our captive to glide into it, and then, having closed up the other end also, carry him home on our shoulders, for the whole fragment was as dry as tinder and not heavier than so much cork. Accordingly, having plugged up one end with bundles of vines and weeds tightly wadded in, we got the snake to enter readily by releasing his head in the mouth of the open end and scratching him vigorously about the tail, because he thought he was escaping into the darkness of the interior. As we were stopping up the second end in a similar manner to the first, and so securing the hissing prisoner within, we noticed some small ants making their appearance through the interstices, but being so taken with the success of our expedient didn't pay much attention to them at the time. As soon, however, as we took the burden on our shoulders the efforts of the imprisoned serpent became frantic for escape, with the result that his writhings disturbed a whole colony of the terrible "fire ants" in the interior, which, swarming in millions through every crack and crevice, covered our neeks and shoulders, getting down between our clothing and our skins. stinging and biting us with such fury that simultaneously we dropped our load and began to tear off our clothing as fast as possible to rid ourselves of our tormentors. This was not the worst, either, for the frail receptacle in which we carried our prisoner smashed to pieces with the fall and liberated the tortured occupant on the open ground in the midst of us, scattering the ants about for yards on every side. Off he scurried through the woods with all the energy he could muster.— Cleveland World.

The present constitution, with all its faults, is better than the old, but you must remember that the bill originating the call of the Convention that formed the Constitution was overwhelmingly Democratic, the Constiutional Convention itself was overwhelmingly Democratic, and at the election at which the Constitution was adopted by over 100,000 majority, the Democrats carried the State by almost 30,000. Take your medicine and quit your yarnin'.

THE State of Kentucky has voted in no less than twenty-six Presidential elections. An analysis of these votes will show that seven of them were cast for candidates whose opinions on the Tariff were doubtful, or whose platforms on the question were either silent, for incidental'Protection, were straddles or as in 1892 for Free Trade, while nigeteen times the State has cast her vote for pronounced Protectionists. Thus it will be seen that the grand old Commonwealth has departed from the faith, but the indications of the present and recent past point unmistakably to an early return to her first love.

A Call to the colored Voters. The colored voters of this county are called to meet at the school house in Hayti Friday night Oct. 26th for the purpose of organizing a republican club and for the purpose of Recieving instruction regarding the Australian Ballot and for electing delegates to the colored Republican convention which convenes in Elizabthtown on the first Saturday in November Every colored man should do his whole duty toward securing the success of the entire Republican ticket. We have a strong ticket from top to bottom, but it don't make any difference how strong the ticket is, to succeed, they must have the voters to back them. Over confidence is detrimental to any enterprise. So we must not be wanting in any effort because of the strength of the ticket, but each man must dohis whole duty until every Republican in the county or in the district is elected.

RUN THROUGH BY ASWORDFISH A Vessel Strangely Damaged in the Gulf of California. The barkentine C. C. Funk, in port at Port Townsend from Santa Rosalia, Mexico, had an unusual and exciting experience in the Gulf of California with a swordfish. The vessel was going south with a cargo of merchandise from San Francisco, and was speeding along at a nine knot rate when it was noticed that the sea was greatly disturbed. The water seemed to boil as though some big animal was racing through it at a tremendous rate of speed. The officers were unable to account for the strange phenomenon, and watched the unusal scene in amazement.

Suddenly the barkentine received such a severe shock that every man on board was carried from his feet. For an instant the vessel was arrested in her progress, stopped still, quivered like a wounded animal, and then slowly got under way. The officers and crew gazed at one another in blank amazement, surmising that a submarine volcano had burst through the bottom of the sea and that the vessel had struck a rock. Capt. Glazier was unable to account for the strange adventure until he arrived at Santa Rosalia, where the vessel was discharged and her hull exam-In the hold of the ship, sticking through the timbers, protruded the extreme end of a fish's sword. About four inches was broken off with a sledge hammer, and is now preserved on board as a trophy of the oceasion. The animal had evidently mistaken the hull of the barkenting a whale, and was bent on taking its life. The sword struck the barkentine on the starboard side, at a point below the water line, beneath the fore chainplates, penetrating a fiveinch plank and one of the ship's timbers, where it was broken, the fish leaving about eighteen inches of his weapon sticking in the vessel's side. Some water came through the aperture, and it was necessary to calk up the hole. Capt. Glazier says that it was the most remarkable adventure that he ever experienced at sea, and that the fish must have been of immense size to have so greatly disturbed the sea and to have struck the vessel with such tremendous force as to have driven its sword through a comparatively new vessel's side. - Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Use Water in Carnival Time.

"During carnival time in some parts of South America," said E. L. Osman, of New Orleans, to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat man, "there is a general revolt against nature in withholding rain the greater part of the year. Water is showered from the balconies and housetops with wanton extravagance, all classes joining in the frolic. I was in Lima during one of these periods of jollification and found that there was not a street where one could be secure from these wattery attacks. In all parts of the town passersby were treated to a shower-bath, and toward evening the sport increased with intensity. Every successful delivery of dipper and bucket being greeted with shouts of laughter. All lasses met with the same reception. Roughly-dressed men, sauntering along the street, would on meeting a richly-dressed lady, dash a cup of water, which they held concealed behind their backs, straight in the lady's face. The ladies attacked in this way would merely smile grimly and pass on. I saw hundreds of men and women showered in this way, but in no instance were the least signs of resentment or anger displayed."

The Record Price for Pictures. Eleven thousand guineas (something over $50,000) is now the record price paid in an auction room in London for a picture. This amount was realized at Christie's for Sir Joshua Reynold's portrait of Lady Betty Delmse, sister of the earl of Carlisle, with her children, a picture which is well known through engravings. It was put up at 5,000 guineas, and was secured by Charles Wertheimer, a dealer, for 11,000 guineas. The famous "Duchess of Devonshire," by Gainsboro, which so mysteriously disappeared, was knocked down for 10, 100 guineas and the Raphael in the Dudley collection two years ago went for about 2,000 guineas.

Roumanian Man Fridays.

A strange custom is still observed in Roumania which, reminds one strongly of Robinson Crusoe. When a servant has displeased his or her master the offender takes his boots in his hands and places them before the bedroom door of his master. It is a sign of great submission, and the boots are either kicked away as an intimation that the fault will not be forgiven, or else the servant is told to place them on his feet, which

"Gents" Is Not Modern Slang. The word "gent" nowadays seems | to wear its hat docked on one side of the head, and to walk with a caddish wagger of vulgar self-importance. But I know a worthy old lady in the county who calls her husband the "old gent," using it as a title of respect, and such it was in her childhood and long before. In 1754 the of one first class limited fare plus Reverend Samuel Daviess, atterward president of Princeton College, traveling in England, decribes the Reverend Dr. Lardner as "a little, pert

This is never justifiable, no matter what may be the income of the young man. Extravagance is always wasteful. But neither must be economize too closely. We may like it or not, but we are judged in this world, first for what we are, but also as we look, and a young man's sense should teach him that it is also wise to create a good impression. Good clothes can not make a young man, but they are a help. A well dressed young man does not necessarily imply that he should wear the highest-priced clothes cut in the very latest style. It is just as possible to be well attired in clothes of moderate cost, so long as they are not "loud" nor "showy," but quiet and neat. CAPTURED A PORCUPINE. A Tennessee Farmer Obtains an Odd

Subject for Exhibition. Jack Landsdow, of District fifteen, Dyer county, Tenn., has struck a piece of unprecedented good luck. Early one morning he picked up a hatchet and started out to the woodpile to cut some kindling for his wife. As he stepped from the kitchen he was considerably surprised to see a large hemlock porcupine climbing a tree about ten feet from the door.

Jack had often heard if a porcupine's tail is cut off while the animal is in the act of climbing it will stop and either refuse to climb higher or descend. As the prickly little animal was only about four feet from the ground Jack had no trouble in springing forward and with a quick blow of the hatchet severing the tail of the porcupine in twain. Sure enough the animal ceased its ascent and remained in the same good position. A porcupine is rarely seen nesseeans. Jack's neighbors soon heard of the porcupine and came to see it. Landsdow could see no reason why he should not make some money day with his prize.

One thing however may be said in favor of the book. The churches of Berwardine, the herosism is very beautiful. And from her quiet useful life some lesson of value may be drawn. Berwardine as she goes from the bedside of the sick and suffering, whom she cheered and comforted by her words and presence is a picture of the gentle self sacrificing christian woman. This character is well portrayed by the author. Otherwise the work is devoid of special interest.

SWEET MARIE. - This popular little song, like "after the Ball," "Maggie Murphy's Home" and "If you Love me Darling," has had its day. The scene must change rapidly and constantly else the votaries of fashionable life thinks life is burdensome. There is an abnormal desire for pleasure in high life, but it cannot endure monotony. Here when a song is taken up by society it is "all the rage" for a while. Nothing is heard but it. Soon, however, something new is demanded; it is found and then all others are forgotten. pathetic; the sentiment of the song if better than that expressed in the song of the day. It is particular adapted to the sentimental age of
